SCOTTISH STUDIES is the Journal of the School of Scottish Studies, a research institute of the University of Edinburgh, and is published twice a year in Spring and Autumn.

Since its inception in 1957 the Journal has aimed at presenting the results of a wide range of research in Scottish traditional life. It contains full-scale articles contributed by members of the staff of the School of Scottish Studies and by other scholars in the field. A series of shorter contributions includes first-hand reports on fieldwork and research carried out by the School, transcriptions from its manuscript and tape-recorded archives, reviews of books recently published on relevant subjects, and an annual bibliography.

Earlier issues have included the following articles:
